At the January 20 regular MFA press briefing, MFA Spokesperson Jiang Yu said Premier Wen Jiabao will visit Switzerland, Germany, Spain and the United Kingdom from January 27-February 2, where he will meet with the leaders of those countries and also meet with EU President Jose Barroso. The Premier plans to attend the upcoming World Economic Forum in Davos, Switzerland. The purpose of Wen's visit is to help the international community build "strategic consensus" and "work together" on the Global Financial Crisis. China also seeks to "further enhance" the mutual understanding and trust of the China-EU "strategic partnership" in the new year. While specific details of the Premier's trip have not yet been released, Assistant Foreign Minister Wu Hongbo plans to provide a background briefing on the visit at the MFA on January 22.

U.S.-China Relations in the New Administration

3. Jiang reiterated the importance of China's relations with the United States as President-elect Obama prepares to take office. She said good U.S.-China relations are in the fundamental interests of both countries and are conducive to peace, stability and development. The present situation is an important "strategic link between past and future." China has a long-term perspective on the relationship and believes it is in our common interest to promote the long-term "healthy" and "stable" development of U.S.-China relations into a "new era." On arms sales to Taiwan, however, Jiang said the United States should abide by its obligations under the three joint communiques, especially the August 17, 1982 communique, and support "peaceful development" of cross-Straits relations with "concrete actions."
